by Mo · Sick but learning to LIVE

START HERE

Hi, I'm Mo.

Every time I looked up "hobbies to try," the list assumed I could stand for two hours, spend $200 on supplies, and have a brain that worked all day. Pottery class! Hiking club! Learn the violin!

I've been sick for 11.5 years. I wanted a hobby too. I just needed one that fit the body I actually have.

So I made this quiz. Ten quick questions tell you which kind of side quester you are: The Maker, The Explorer, The Cozy One, or The Social Side Quester. Then you get five hobbies matched to your type. Every one has a spoon rating, a way to try it for free before you buy anything, and a 2% battery version for your worst days.

There are no wrong answers. Go with your gut, not with who you used to be.

Getting a life anyway,

Mo

> A quick, honest note. These are ideas for fun, not medical advice. You know your body best. If a hobby doesn't feel right for you today, shrink it, swap it, or skip it.

MOSTLY A'S

YOU ARE

The Maker

A

You feel better when your hands are busy and there's something to show for it.

You like starting with nothing and ending with a thing. A wonky mug, a tiny stitched flower, a page that wasn't there this morning.

Making gives your brain somewhere to go that isn't your symptoms. The trick is finding crafts that work in short bursts, sitting down, and don't punish you for walking away halfway through.

Your superpower

You don't need to be good at it. You need it to be yours.

Watch out for Supply rabbit holes. Try the free version before you buy the kit.

Your five matched hobbies are on the next page.

Try one this week. Use the free version first. If you like it, keep it. If you don't, cross it off and try the next one. Quitting is data, not failure.
